

What do you need to know about French utilities?

Whether you're renting or buying, here's what you need to know about French utilities like electricity, gas, and water. In France, electricity, gas, and water are managed by various providers, giving residents the freedom to choose tariffs and services that best suit their needs. This flexibility is a boon for expats navigating life in France.

Who provides electricity in France?

The vast majority of electricity in France is supplied by the state-owned EDF (Electricité de France), although there are now also several other electricity providers, and it is worth shopping around for the best deal (more about that in a moment). First, let's get into the basics of setting up and connecting electricity at your French home.

Where can I get electricity in France?

EDF and Engie are two state-owned energy companies providing both electricity and gas to residential and commercial properties. Ideally, these are your best options to get electricity in France because they have regulated tariffs.

How do I set up my electricity in France?

Your landlord or Notaire may advise you to "appelez EDF" (call the EDF) in order to set up your electricity--this step assumes that you will choose this provider. So, many French citizens are still sceptical of, or even unaware of, the numerous options available, but this is gradually changing.
