

What kind of light does a knee pad use?

The pad uses 660nm red light and 850nm near-infrared light, which are two of the most studied wavelengths for joint recovery and inflammation. The design is straightforward -- it's a flexible silicone pad that wraps around the knee and fastens with Velcro straps.

Which red light therapy device is best for knee pain?

The Kineon MOVE+Pro is the most effective red light therapy device I've used for knee pain, both in terms of performance and convenience. What makes the MOVE+Pro unique is its combination of 660nm red light and 808nm infrared lasers, allowing for both surface-level and deep tissue treatment.

Which Kineon device is best for knee pain relief?

Kineon MOVE+Pro - best for quick pain relief. Kineon's MOVE+Pro is a joint-specific red light therapy device with a unique design. It has two light emission areas and three modules, so you can target multiple parts of your knee where you are experiencing the most pain. The MOVE+Pro is very versatile.

Which RLT device is best for knee pain recovery?

Using the manufacturers' technical specifications, I picked RLT devices with wavelengths between 630nm and 660nm or between 810nm and 850nm, which, according to the research papers I read, show the most promise for knee pain recovery. Irradiance. Devices tend to range between 45 and 200 mW/cm²; in irradiance levels.
